Message from the President

I helped catalog for the Spring Heisey Benefit Auction! I learned a lot about Heisey, saw some patterns I had never thought were Heisey, helped identify a few and made some new friends. If you have never helped catalog I highly recommend it. I know I had a lot of fun, and lots of other people did too. It was a wonderful learning experience. With all the knowledge at the Museum this is the place to learn. I want to thank everyone who made lunch for all the volunteers it was delicious! Speaking of the Spring Auction, the dates will be Friday -Saturday, March 31-April 1, 2017, so mark your calendar and save the dates!

But before the auction is the 44th Annual All Heisey Show & Sale in Annandale, Virginia. The dates are the 18th and 19th of March, there is a show card included in this Heisey News on page 5. This is the only all Heisey show I am aware of. If there is a special piece of Heisey glass you are looking for, if you just want to add to your collection or are looking for a gift, this is the sale you need to attend! I know I will be there!!

Another volunteer who works "behind the scene" is Michael Maher. Michael is always coming up with good ideas for the Museum. Some of the ideas Michael had were: moving the Museum shop to the present location, Heisey glass beads, Heisey glass marbles, the Heisey etching "T" shirts and the 'replaying of the old Heisey radio ads.' Michael is at the Museum so much I think the Museum is his second home! I also want to thank Kate for supporting Michael with his dedication to the Museum!

On a sad note Ned R. Lavengood, Sr. passed away on December 29th at Lower Cape Fear Hospice in Wilmington, NC. Ned was an avid Heisey Glass collector and served as President of North Carolina Heisey Glass Collectors. He also served on the board of the Heisey Collectors of America. He was a great believer in volunteer work. He felt you should leave a community better off than when you arrived. "Put more in than you take out!" and he did this for more than 60 years!

Happy Heisey Hunting!

Words From Your Curator — Dírector

CONTRACTOR CONTRACTOR

February in Ohio is a time period that makes me very HAPPY to have my office located where it is in the King House. No matter how dark and gloomy it may be outside, and for how many days in a row it has been that way, I am able to experience the joyful brightness and amazing diversity of colors of Room 2. One cannot spend time surrounded by those Heisey colors and remain "blue". For all of you in sunshine deprived locals may the viewing of your Heisey do the same !

In January and February with being closed to the public on both Mondays and Tuesdays we are able to tackle some of those bigger, sometimes "messier "jobs. Beth Sperry, our Financial Coordinator, returned from her much deserved vacation to a new office. In moving books downstairs to our wonderful new library we opened up an upstairs room in the administration building that actually has windows. Beth is enjoying light and air and knowing what is going on outside these days as never before due to the fact that her previous hole in the wall had no windows. Michael and I worked hard on this and are very pleased not only to have Beth happily situated but to have also created a much needed and looked forward to "project room". We now have an area where the tools and supplies can be housed together in an organized and set way. No more looking all over the place for a screwdriver !

Walter and I have also been working on reorganizing the cut goblet cases in the King House dining room. With the very generous help of the North Carolina Study Group, in celebration of their 30th Anniversary, and Jamie Robinson at Replacements last July we were able to add some 27 cut stems to the collection. These are, for the most part, newer cuttings that we had no examples of and it is time to marry them into the permanent Collection displays. The cases will now in general be arranged along a timeline of cuttings. We look forward to you viewing these on your next visit.

Please enjoy our cover as much as all of the visitors and staff are enjoying the actual space of the Louise Ream Library. All of the new period lighting, both ceiling fixtures and lamps, have recently been installed and have made for a very homelike, usable, and comfortable space. Thanks to the new TV and equipment, visitors are now able to enjoy the introduction video by a warm fire. Thank-You to all our members who have made this source of pride possible and such a positive addition to our Museum.

Let us all use our Heisey to chase away the "blues" and I look forward to seeing many of you at the Annandale Show and also our Spring Auction !

Through the Glass Looking: Heisey's Adventures in Optics Wonderland, Part 5

Eric Tankesley-Clarke

A.H. Heisey & Co. started timidly with one optic in 1906. By 1930, they had tried quite a few variations on optics, both blown and pressed. As the second color era wound down in the mid-1930's, so did Heisey's variety of optics. Some of the blown stem patterns continued with their bland 10panel Wide Optic bowls, but most of the other optics had been dropped. What would Heisey do to keep things interesting?

Optics go futuristic

The whole landscape was changing. Arts and Crafts had been earthbound and introspective while Art Nouveau had looked wistfully backward. Art Deco propelled the forward. Popular imagination culture climbed up toward the planets and the sky. The Mt. Wilson Observatory, with its 100inch Hooker telescope installed in 1917, regularly made news as it peered into the night sky. Robert Goddard launched the first liquid-fueled rocket in 1926. Buck Rogers premiered in 1928. In 1930, Clyde Tombaugh discovered small, chilly Pluto. By 1934, Flash Gordon fought to save Planet Mongo from the evil Emperor Ming. Orson Welles made 1938 shudder through the War of the Worlds radio broadcast. New York prepared for the 1939 World's Fair, with its iconic Trvlon Perisphere, and unapologetically leaving the past behind to prophesy the future (fig. 1).

Into this milieu Heisey dropped a new optic. The Saturn Optic, in both blown and pressed forms, came into production about 1937. Sometimes simply called "ring" optic on the factory floor, someone thought better of it for commercial purposes and named it Saturn. (At least one catalog spelled it "Saturne," but we'll give them points for trying, anyway.) Around the optic the company built an entire new pattern, #1485 Saturn. If you've found a good name, make the most of it, I always say. This, of course, gives rise to confusion now. Sometimes it's hard to know whether someone is talking about Saturn the pattern or Saturn the optic. Heisey couldn't always keep it straight, either.

To give their new Saturn pattern a strong start, Heisey borrowed pieces from #1184 Yeoman, already known for its sleekness. The Yeoman stemware, for instance, was adapted easily by simply using the Saturn optic, and now we had a whole new pressed stemware line in #1485 Saturn (fig. 2). Add Saturn optic and a heavy sham to the Yeoman cocktail shaker and out comes a Saturn vase. Among other pieces serving as progenitors for the pressed Saturn pattern were the #1183 Revere marmalade and comport, #353 Medium Flat Panel oil, and #1184 Yeoman 12-oz. soda. In addition to these, of course, Heisey designed several completely new pieces to fill out the pattern.

Fig. 2. #1485 Saturn vase and goblet in Zircon with pressed Saturn Optic, with #1184 Yeoman cocktail shaker (Stiegel Blue, no optic) and goblet (Flamingo, Diamond Optic)

There was no blown pattern line of stems called Saturn, no line that was considered a direct counterpart to the pressed #1485 Saturn. According to company convention, pressed #1485 Saturn should have had a corresponding blown #4085 Saturn. Instead, Heisey broke with their own system and gave the 4085 number to another 1937 introduction, Kohinoor (fig. 3)

Fig. 3. #4083 Stanhope goblet, #8122 Polly goblet, and #4085 Kohinoor soda, all with blown Saturn Optic.

Blown Saturn Optic was slightly harder to make than the panel optics, for the same reasons that we saw regarding Diamond Optic. You may recall that for Wide and Medium Optics, for instance, the gather of glass was simply dipped into an optic mould and then pulled out for further blowing into the final shape. If a gather of glass was put into a Saturn Optic mould and just pulled straight out, it would ruin the optic. The Saturn Optic moulds had to be hinged (fig. 4) so they could be opened to leave the optic intact when the gather was removed. Then the second round of blowing could proceed as normal.

Fig. 4. Blown Saturn Optic mould, opened

Just as Checker Optic had been frequently linked with Hawthorne, the blown Saturn Optic was strongly linked to a color. In about 1937, Heisey introduced their turquoise, calling it Zircon. Virtually all pressed #1485 Saturn can be found in Zircon. Among blown ware, we find #4083 Stanhope, #4090 Coventry, and #4091 Kimberly in Saturn Optic whenever they were in Zircon, and even some #4054 Coronation. #4085 Kohinoor, on the other hand, used the Saturn Optic both in crystal and in Zircon, as did an undocumented pattern which can be dated to the 1930's, #8122 Polly (named for its stem, shaped as a polyhedron).

Among vases, #4057 Cecelia was made in Zircon with Saturn Optic. There was a small 5-in. Cecelia vase that is sometimes mistaken for a Saturn tumbler or soda. The small Cecelia vase will have sides almost perfectly vertical and a small, inset foot. In contrast, the similarly-sized Saturn piece that Heisey called a 10-oz. tumbler (actually shaped more like a soda) has graduated sides, wider at the top, with a bottom that is concave with a ground rim.

Saturn Optic is significant in Heisey's ball vases (fig. 5). Heisey ball vases with Wide Panel Optic are #4045 Heron. Saturn Optic ball vases, whether in crystal or Zircon, are usually considered to be #4085. Some collectors will call them Kohinoor and others will call them Saturn ball vases. As so often happens, A.H. Heisey & Co. did little to sort this out for us. The whole #4085 thing is because the 1937 catalog listing for #4085 Kohinoor included Saturn Optic ball vases pattern number. under that Heisey, however, did not respect this nice distinction. Several price lists from all periods of the ball vases' production can be found which list #4045 ball vases with either Wide Optic (w/o) or Saturn Optic (s/ o). Similarly, the #4161 Little King jugs are usually considered to be plain; when with the Saturn Optic we think of them as #4085. But one can find #4161 jugs in Heisey price lists with either "w/o" or "s/o". Yet, it is such a handy way to separate them that collectors will probably always want to put the Saturn Optic jugs and ball vases under #4085, whatever name they may wish to attach to the number.

By about 1939, Heisey retired Zircon. The blown Saturn Optic hung on, dwindling to a few ball vases, the #4057 Cecelia vases and ice tub, and #4056 Caesar salad bowl by the late 1940's. The pressed Saturn Optic, however, continued uninterrupted in the #1485 Saturn line in crystal, although the pieces offered changed over time.

the 1950's, Heisey resurrected the In turquoise color, calling it Limelight this time around. Blown Saturn Optic was put back into wider use. The combination of the color and the optic showed up in re-issued #4083 Stanhope stems and #4057 Cecelia vases. (Only the bowl was Limelight in the Stanhope re-issue, not the foot. See elsewhere in this issue. Cecelia and Stanhope: Zircon or Limelight?) Blown Saturn Optic and Limelight were also combined for some pieces of #5085 Mid-Century and #5092 Empress Lily stems, as well as the #4085 ice-lip jug and the #4056 Caesar salad bowl.

Among pressed Limelight pieces with Saturn Optic, there were the re-designed #1485 Saturn oil, taller and sleeker in its new incarnation, and a hostess helper set. (In 1955, Heisey sought to add to the confusion by calling all their Limelight pieces by one pattern name, Hi-Style. Fortunately, that is a name that did not stick and never made it into a printed catalog.) None of the Limelight Saturn Optic pieces are especially easy to add to your collection.

Occasionally, one sees a Saturn salt shaker in a very dark turquoise to teal; these appear to have been made by Boyd; whoever made them, they are not Heisey. This same non-Heisey shaker has also been seen in a light blue that could be mistaken for Heisey's Experimental Blue.

Also in the 1950's, Heisey tried Saturn Optic in other colors. Dawn was used for the #1485 Saturn re-designed oil and salt shakers. (The oil is reported to have been made in Imperial's Charcoal, very similar to Dawn, so yet another peril for the collector.) #4057 Cecelia vases with Saturn Optic were made in Dawn and the other 1950's color, Sultana. The Dawn oil and shakers are hard to find. The vases are rare in either Dawn or Sultana. Imagine a set of four Cecelia Saturn Optic vases on your shelves in crystal and all three colors. Imagination is about as far as most of us will ever get.

Heisey was not alone in producing this kind of optic. Tiffin had a version they called Swedish Optic. Some Tiffin Swedish Optic crystal vases are similar enough to Heisey vases such as #1485 Saturn, #4192 Hanna, or #4196 Rhoda to cause a second glance, but there are obvious differences so they shouldn't be mistaken. Tiffin also made a color called Copen Blue which is similar to some shades of Heisey's rare Experimental Blue. Copen Blue pieces made with Swedish Optic have quickened the hearts of a few Heisey hunters.

Another impostor is Duncan and Miller's #155 Festive pattern. (Of course, if you are a D&M collector, I suppose you might think Heisey is the impostor. But then, you wouldn't be reading this if you thought that way, would you?) Festive is likely to be mistaken for Heisey's Saturn pattern because the optic is nearly identical, the glass is of good quality and heft, and Festive can be found in a deep turquoise color that is close to the darker, greener shades of Zircon. Thankfully, Duncan's shapes are different than Heisey's. Even if you have a nice "zircon" piece with a "Saturn" optic, if the shape is unfamiliar, you should consider whether you have Duncan rather than Heisey.

Before we leave Saturn Optic, I should mention a variation. About 1937, there was something called Saturn Wavy Line Optic. We only know of this optic because of an undated brochure that seems to have been published when Saturn was introduced showing various Saturn Optic pieces. including #1485 Saturn and #4083 Stanhope. The pressed rose bowl and floral bowl in #1485 Saturn are the only pieces illustrated with the wavy line optic (fig. 6). So far as I know, no examples have ever been found, or at least none have ever been reported. Since the brochure was made using a factory photograph of real objects, we know the Saturn Wavy Line Optic was actually made and not just a figment of an artist's imagination. No price list has been found that mentions this optic. It seems likely that no more than a turn or two was ever made. The passing resemblance to Duncan's popular #112 Caribbean pattern, introduced a year earlier, may not be coincidental. Ahem.

Probably no other optic that Heisey produced was entangled in so many other aspects of the company's production. Who knew? We've explored more than Buck Rogers and Flash Gordon ever did, and we didn't have to leave the planet to do it. Next time we'll move forward in time and see how Heisey began a new era of optical innovation.

Heisey knew what a few rings could do long before Beyoncé's Single Ladies. If you like it, put a ring on it, or at the very least write me at heiseyglass@gmail.com.

Cecelia and Stanhope: Zircon or Limelight?

Eric Tankesley-Clarke

The #4057 Cecelia vases and #4083 Stanhope stems with colored bowl and crystal stem and foot are perhaps the only Saturn Optic pieces that were made in both Zircon and Limelight. (I wouldn't be surprised, though, if #4085 jugs were made in Zircon; the jugs certainly were made in Limelight.) Most turquoise Heisey can be labeled one or the other by date of production. If you have Stanhope stems or Cecelia vases in your collection, however, what color should you call them? Was Limelight the same as Zircon?

For all practical purposes, Limelight and Zircon are the same. While there may have been minor differences in formulas, many shades occur in both periods of production. This color was difficult to control; it varied with the batch and how the molten glass was handled during the making.

If the foot of a Stanhope stem is colored, then it is probably Zircon, because those are thought to have been made only in the 1930's (see photo). If only the bowl of a Stanhope stem is colored, there is no foolproof test to know when it was made. Ditto for the turquoise Cecelia vases.

Ultraviolet light, either fluorescent or LED, may help. Some—but certainly not all— pieces of undoubted Zircon react very strongly to UV, a strong, brilliant uranium green, sometimes as strong as the reactions of Emerald or Marigold. By undoubted Zircon, I mean turquoise pieces and patterns made only during the 1930's, such as Ridgeleigh, Fern, Kohinoor, or foot-colored Stanhope. I have never found a piece of known Limelight (1950's pieces such as Mid-Century or Whirlpool) which reacts to UV with more than a moderate yellow-green, if at all.

The conclusion? With some hesitancy, I suspect that when it comes to Cecelia vases or Stanhope stems with colored bowls and crystal feet, a strong UV reaction indicates a piece is Zircon. Lack of a strong uranium-like UV reaction, however, does not argue for either Zircon or Limelight; in that case, call these turquoise pieces by whatever Heisey color name appeals to you most.

Goblet, cocktail, and #4083 champagne in Stanhope. The cocktail and champagne are Zircon (note the colored feet). The cocktail glows strongly UVbut under the champagne does not. The crystal-footed goblet does not react to UV and could be either Limelight or Zircon.

Dave Spahr - Auction Manager

Our 44th Annual Spring Benefit Auction will be held on MARCH 31 & APRIL 1, 2017, at the GMP Local #244 Union Hall at 350 Hudson Ave. in Newark. We have held it there the last several years and they are great hosts! Opposite this page is a listing where you can make motel reservations to stay while attending the auction.

The deadline for submitting an article for this newsletter is January 15th- which happens to be our last day for receiving consignments. While we expect some glass at the last minute, we have received quite a bit of glass so far so we have begun our cataloging! Hopefully we will reach the 1,200 to 1,300 lot level. Watch for our March Heisey News for a preview of some of the glass we will be offering!

We hope to finish cataloging in early February and finish entering and proofing the information for the catalog soon thereafter. We will be putting the catalog information on our website around March 1st (our target) and try to have the catalog for your review in your hands around the same time. Also on the website and the printed catalog will be our absentee bid forms and instructions, as well as shipping information. We will be preparing and sending out catalogs to members who consigned glass or purchased glass in the last two years. If you are a member and want a printed catalog but don't fall into either of the aforementioned categories, please contact the museum AFTER March 10th and one will be sent to you.

We will again have absentee bidders make their own arrangements to have their auction glass shipped. As mentioned above, we will provide on line and in the auction catalog a list of vendors (shippers) who will to pick up your glass, pack it, and send it to you. We simply do not have the volunteers, materials on hand, and staffing capability to do this task.

This auction is your association's largest fundraiser. Please plan on attending if you can. If you can't make it, consider bidding absentee for that piece you desire. If you come to the auction and want to help we can use you- we are always looking for volunteers to help at the auction. If you would spend an hour or two helping, please contact me at 937-372-7166 or masdgs@aol.com. I'll find a job for you!

Happy Heisey Hunting ! See you at the Auction.

HCA 2017 Operating Budget

Here is the HCA budget for 2017 displayed alongside of the actual results for 2013 through 2015 and the budget for 2016 (as of the time of writing this article the full year 2016 actual results were still underway). The budget process started back in October and finally ended in December with the approval by the Board Of Directors. Many people from both within and outside of HCA were involved by providing their insight and expertise into the process used to complete the budget.

Operationally this budget is cash neutral. By saying this I mean that the cash required to fund our operations is met by funds generated by our operations without a surplus or a deficit. Since this is an Operational Budget, it excludes sources of revenues such as donations for Endowment, Capital or Acquisitions.

Key to our budget are the gift shop sales. These have grown tremendously from just a few years ago as a result of relocating the gift shop close to the main entrance, real Heisey being available for sale and introducing Beads and Marbles into the mix. It is interesting to note that the proceeds from selling marbles in 2016 came close to covering our cash investment required to produce the marbles. This means that going forward our marble sales will be pure profit. Another new star item in our line-up is used books. While the dollars aren't huge, the sales of these donated books are popular with our Museum visitors and the revenue from their sale flows straight to the bottom line.

We have made great strides in making the annual convention a profitable endeavor and we expect that to continue this year.

By Jon Heron, HCA Treasurer

Thanks to the Northwest and Texas Clubs we have learned how to make the Percy and Vivian Moore Weekends tremendously successful. It will be a challenge in 2017 to match the results of the prior two years' events since the Fall Select Auction will be part of the PVM weekend. So, please be sure that you have your calendars marked for a trip to Newark for that weekend and set your mind on bringing home some treasured pieces for your Heisey household.

We continue as always to be mindful of the expenses that HCA incurs. While we strive to maintain a Museum that makes our membership proud and a jewel of the Newark Community, we aim to do so without breaking the bank. While we have many line items on the expense side of our profit and loss statement, every single one of these lines gets examined at least once every year. Believe me, if we can save a buck without compromising safety or image, we will jump on it.

While our budget is a financial representation, what really makes HCA a class organization is its' volunteers. None of our major annual events or the daily operation of the Museum happen without so very many people putting in countless hours in order to achieve our success. Personally, while I truly love the hunt for Heisey and the collecting of Heisey, the best part is being involved with so many awesome people from all across the country. I guess that's while you'll often hear me say "I come for the glass, but I stay for the People".

So people, let's have an awesome 2017.

A Letter from your 2017 Convention Chairman

Linda Greenwood

Greetings to all! I hope the New Year has found you well. Planning for "Heisey in Hollywood" is well underway and is shaping up to be an eventful and fun filled 2017 National Heisey Glass Convention. I am sure you all have penciled in the Convention dates on your calendars but just in case, keep June 14-17, 2017, in Newark Ohio open!

Many of the key Convention events that we love and are familiar with, such as the welcome dinner, the elegant glass show, sale and table displays will remain unchanged. This year however, we are adding some exciting new features that we hope you will enjoy. First, due to the positive feedback received and the continued construction in the downtown Newark area, the Flea Market will again be held at the Canal Marketplace. Ideas are being discussed to add a few attractions there this year that will appeal to all audiences and visitors. The Brunch is in the planning stages but will go hand in hand with the "Heisey in Hollywood" seminar being held at beautiful Midland Theater. The Banquet location will be held at another historic Newark location, The Elks. The nostalgic feel of this venue will fit perfectly with the Hollywood theme. And, the tentative menus for all events will be sure to please. We are continuing to brainstorm ideas to make all events educational, fun and entertaining and I will keep you posted as the plans come together.

Recently I reached out to the various Study Clubs regarding Silent and Live Auction donations. I hope all groups are coming up with some beautiful donation pieces as well as that special something to make your donation personal so the lucky winner will have that unique item that says it came from you. Please feel free to touch base with me with any questions or ideas. We are also continuing to find sightings of Heisey used in Hollywood films and at various hotels and venues throughout the decades. As you spot pieces, please share!

We are so happy to see how the excitement of "Heisey in Hollywood" has grown. As you can see by just the amount I am able to speak about in this small article, there will be no shortcomings and our goal is to make this a wonderful event that will encourage attendance and registration. This is Your 2017 National Heisey Glass Convention. Looking forward to seeing you all soon!

Heisey Sugar Shakers and Pourers

John Martinez

The other day, while trying to come up with a topic for a club program, I noticed I had most of the Heisey sugar shakers/ pourers in my collection. There was a colonial pourer that I had seen in Catalog No. 32, January, 1953 (right), but when I looked at the number for it, I realized it was a really poor drawing of the #411 Tudor sugar dispenser. At this point, I thought I had an example of all, but alas, further research indicated I may be missing one. We'll get to that later.

A.H. Heisey & Company started operating toward the end of the Victorian era and produced everything conceivable for the Victorian table. Baked goods were a favorite of the times, as they are today, and every Victorian table had a muffineer, or sugar shaker on it so people could sprinkle sugar on the tasty confections being served. Muffineers were made mostly of porcelain or glass. The porcelain shakers were decorated and painted quite elaborately, and in glass are mostly found in a company's most ornate patterns. Today, many muffineers will be found in antique shops and shows, used as hat pin holders.

Over the course of the Heisey Company's history, they made sugar shakers and pourers in ten different patterns, though numerous other items produced could be turned into a sugar shaker or pourer by putting a different top on them. Heisey sold their shakers and pourers with and without tops, so finding one with a non-Heisey top is not necessarily a bad thing. The shakers were meant for home use, where the pourers were sold to restaurants and diners for public use.

The first Heisey sugar shaker was in the #1201 Fandango pattern, from 1896 thru 1903. It came with either a nickel top or a silver plated top that was larger than most of the metal tops used on later shakers. The metal tops for the Fandango shaker are also perfect fits for the Crystolite and Plantation syrups. If you can't find a proper "drip cut" handled top for your syrup, you can turn it into a sugar shaker (right).

The next Heisey pattern to have a sugar shaker was #305 Punty and Diamond Point, from 1900 thru 1907. Heisey offered the #305 with their "Best Silver Plated Top." This is a thin and ornate silver plated top that was very fragile, few are found in good condition today. Most of the sugar shakers, from this time on, had the same sized top. The #305 shaker I have came from a lady who had just returned from England. She found it in an antique shop while visiting her daughter, whose husband was stationed at an Air Force base there. At the turn of the 20th Century, Heisey exported a lot of #300 Peerless and #305 Punty and Diamond Point to England. The shop owner was quite surprised to find that her English Muffineer was actually American made. It has a shiny metal collar that is plastered over the screw threads, and a domed shiny metal top that slides over the collar. Definitely not standard Heisey issue, but very nice none the less.

The #352 Flat Panel sugar shaker was produced from 1906 thru 1929. With the Victorian era drawing to a close, Colonial style glassware was now all the rage and Heisey was the front runner on the Colonial Bandwagon. The Flat Panel shaker can often be found with the Diamond-H mark near the top, in the middle of one of the panels. The Heisey tops found are a Silver Plated Top and the #1 Sanitary Top (metal collar and glass duster). The Silver Plated Top is a heavy pot metal lid that today has most of the silver worn away. (The one I have is in rather poor shape, as can be seen pictured on the last page). Many glass decorating companies purchased the Flat Panel blanks and used them for elaborate cuttings, topping them off with sterling silver lids. Though the dealer who is selling one of these cut Flat Panel shakers rarely knows who made it (the cutting often covers the Heisey mark), the price is usually a lot more than I am willing to pay!

The #1776 Kalonyal sugar shaker was produced from 1906 thru 1909 and is extremely rare. It is not marked and came with the same "Best Silver Plated Top" as the #305 shaker. As far as decorations go, some of the Kalonyal pattern can be found with the raised panels ruby stained.

The #150 Banded Flute shaker was produced from 1907 thru 1932 and can be found with the same tops as the #352 Flat Panel shaker. It is usually marked on one of the panels, between the bands and the top. It may be found with the bands covered in silver overlay, and sometimes is found with a vine cutting.

The #1183 Revere shaker was produced from 1913 thru 1953, long after most of the rest of the pattern had ceased production. It is a rather plain looking shaker, not marked, and it appears to be begging for some kind of decoration, either cutting or etching, but I have never seen one on it. Most often, the shaker is found with the No.1 Sanitary Top. Sometime in the mid-twenties or early thirties, it ceased being a sugar shaker and became a sugar pourer, most likely sold to restaurants and diners for pouring sugar in coffee. If it is a pourer, it likely has a Reed and Barton top. In Catalog #32, January, 1953, the pattern is #1184, indicating it was now part of the Yeoman line. The shaker was probably consolidated into the Yeoman line when it became a pourer.

The #411 Tudor sugar was called a dispenser, produced from 1923 thru 1953, and is marked on the bottom. It was in production long after the rest of the pattern had been discontinued, and other companies made a sugar pourer that is very similar. Look for the Diamond-H. I have never seen it decorated, and the top is larger than anything else used by Heisey. The top on mine is sterling silver and engraved with the name of a country club (Chase-Hunt). Even though the Tudor "dispenser" was produced for forty years, they seem to be hard to find. There was also a handless syrup bottle produced in Tudor that had a handled Reed and Barton top. Without the top, it can be turned into a sugar shaker with a #60 salt top, or a pourer with a pourer top. The Tudor syrup bottle is not in any of the catalogs, and is a rare find.

The #1001 Caswell Waffle Set was produced from 1925 thru 1933, and consists of a footed syrup and footed shaker for powdered sugar. The set is found with the diamond optic in Crystal, Flamingo, Hawthorne and Crystal with Moongleam foot and handle. The Caswell set was never marked and is often found with a silver overlay decoration and sterling silver top (right). The lid for the sugar shaker is the #60 metal salt top, and can also be found with the #2 Glass Sanitary salt top. The Caswell Waffle set is very desirable to have in any color, but the set in all Crystal is hardest to find. Probably because there was much more demand for the sets in color.

The #1483 Saturn sugar pourer was produced from 1937 thru 1953 and was not marked. The Saturn optic is very subtle on the pourer, and is often hard to see, (you really have to look for it). In Clarence Vogel's Spring 1978 Heisey

Newscaster, he shows a sugar pourer that is the same shape and size as the Saturn pourer, but has no optic to it. He gave it pattern number #7119 and named it Ceres. This is one I have not seen, but I am keeping an eye out for it. Both of these are found with a Reed and Barton top, and can be turned into shakers using the same #1 Sanitary top as in the Revere pattern shakers.

The last item in this discussion is the #1520 Colonade sugar pourer, made in 1940 for the Colonade Restaurant in Cleveland, OH. This is an extremely difficult item to find since it seems to have been a specialty, short run item for a single vender. The top of this pourer is a touch larger and will be a very tight fit for a #60 salt top. The original pourer top is nearly impossible to find.

Over the years, I have been lucky to find a couple of sugar pourer tops on large salt shakers. Luckily, they were both Heisey salt shakers, and are both in my collection with proper tops. Both of these salts were sold as sugar pourers. I now have these tops on my #411 Tudor syrup/sugar pourer and my #1520 Colonade sugar pourer.

Whether you use them for sifting sugar on your favorite morning confection or pouring sugar in your coffee, Heisey shakers/pourers make a sweet addition to any collection.
