President's Update

Amy Jo Jones

The Board of Directors met July 30, in Newark, for an all day planning session. Although not mandatory according to the bylaws, this mid-summer gathering has become one of the most important meetings of the term. At this meeting the Board has a chance to discuss the course for the upcoming year assessing the needs of the organization, looking at new ideas, and putting into action some of the plans debated and formulated during the course of the day.

One discussion item of the meeting was the reading of a mission statement by Karen Kneisley, HCA curator, for the June 1995 kick-off of a year-long celebration of the centennial anniversary of the A.H. Heisey Company. Through the rest of 1994 and into 1996, museum and related HCA functions will begin to focus on this historic happening through a series of special events and educational activities. Already the Education and Convention Committees are working toward building on a new awareness of the historical impact of the A.H. Heisey Company which began production in Newark in 1896. Another 1996 milestone to be celebrated is the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of HCA. Through the newsletter, members will be kept informed of developments toward the centennial 1996 project to receive feedback on your ideas and to encourage participation in the celebration.

The recent planning session focused on plan for the centennial celebration of the Heisey factory.

Convention 1994 was reviewed and plans discussed for next year's schedule. It was agreed to keep the same schedule for 1995 based on comments received at the annual meeting and gathered by board members. Dates will be the week of June 12 through 17. Pro and con comments were very helpful to the board in reaching the decision. I would like to thank members who took the time to write me expressing their opinions and suggestions and to those who were willing to share their ideas with me during convention. We look forward to another successful and action packed week in June 1995. Just make your plans and reservations early, Spring Nationals will be held that same week. ♦

In Memoriam...

We were all saddened to learn of the death of Mary Heisey Merrill. She was with us during convention as she had been for many years, both at the Former Employees Reception and at the banquet with many of her family in attendance. We shall miss her.

From the Newark Advocate obituary: "Mrs. Merrill, age 71, of Newark, died Saturday morning, July 30, 1994, at her home. Born May 17, 1923, in Newark, Ohio, she was the daughter of the late T. Clarence and Anne (Davis) Heisey. She was the granddaughter of the late A.H. Heisey who was the founder and President of the A.H. Heisey Glassware Co.

"At one time she was a receptionist at the Pharis Tire and Rubber Co. in Newark. She attended Knox School in Cooperstown, New York and attended Denison University where she was affiliated with Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority. Member of: Lifetime member of Trinity Episcopal Church, 50 Year member of the 20th Century Club, Monday Talks, Moundbuilders Country Club, Buckeye Lake Yacht Club, Heisey Collectors of America.

Mary Heisey Merrill attended the 1994 convention banquet with members of her family.

"She was preceded in death by first husband George DeArmond Curtin II, by second husband Col. Edward G. Merrill, and one brother Timothy Heisey. Survived by: Son; George DeArmond Curtin III, Webster Springs, WV, Daughter; Anne Heisey Curtin Harris, Newark, OH, [and five grandchildren, three step-children and three step-grandchildren.]" ♦

Curator's Report

Karen D. Kneisley

The July 30 planning session was an exciting one. The Board of Directors enthusiastically accepted a two-year proposal for educational activities. Because we are approaching the significant year of 1996, it was decided that the focus will be on the upcoming centennial of A.H. Heisey and Company. Beginning this fall, public relations efforts, programs and special events will serve as building blocks for a 1995-1996 celebration.

The first step was to put into perspective the goals that should be accomplished by such an ambitious schedule. The Board accepted the following mission statement as a guideline for action:

In June 1995 Heisey Collectors of America, Inc. and the National Heisey Glass Museum will kick off a year-long celebration of the centennial anniversary of A.H. Heisey and Company. A series of special events and educational activities will focus on the historical impact, as well as the glassware that was created by the company from 1896 to 1957 in Newark, Ohio.

Our goals for this celebration:

to foster new awareness of the importance of the glassmaking industry to the history of the city of Newark, the state of Ohio and the United States;

to initiate short- and long-term programs that reach out to new and existing audiences thereby demonstrating the organization's role in the collection, preservation, research and interpretation of specific artifacts of the glassmaking industry; to encourage and reinforce the community's participation in the ongoing process of understanding the significance of the industrial aspects of our culture and to personalize this understanding with the localized history of A.H. Heisey and Company.

While this statement reflects the twenty-four years of efforts thus far, it adds to HCA's agenda the issues of new audiences and a broader interest in the historical background of the industry. Activities will center on existing scheduling, such as the quarterly functions. The 1995 and 1996 conventions will play critical roles in the celebration.

At the September meeting the Board will discuss further details and put specific programs into place. Look for more information in coming issues of Heisey News. There will be many ways that members can share in the excitement of the centennial. ♦

Focus on the Collection—They Come in All Sizes

Karen D. Kneisley

This spring we received a very odd bequest. The attorney for the estate of Irene Brown called me to make arrangements to drop off a "very large lamp," as he put it. He had no idea what it was, he wasn't even sure he had given me all of the pieces. I foraged through the wrapping paper and put together what turned out to be a #300 Old Williamsburg five-light candelabra that had been converted into an electric lamp (light bulb included). What a hunk of Crystal!

Programs during 1995-1996 will focus on the centennial of A.H. Heisey and Company.

The center hemisphere has been converted to hold the electrical guts. The remaining four arms support a large circular brass fixture that holds up a Holophane light shade. The brass supports fit over the threaded part of the arm that would normally hold the ferrule, bobèche and candlecup. Crystals surround the brass circle.

All sorts of Heisey items have been turned into lighting—jugs, jars, vases, candlesticks (if you came to convention, you probably saw the nice selection that was on view in the display). But this has got to be the heaviest one! It amounts to more than the average end-table lamp.

I didn't know much about the lamp when it first came to the museum. But the other day, its history was "illuminated" for me. Mrs. Brown's daughter sent a transcript of a conversation she had with her mother about the lamp.

Five of Irene Brown's uncles from the Murray family worked at the Heisey factory: Thomas (Tom), Lafayette (Lafe), James, John, Grover and Frances (Frank). Uncle John, who also worked at Holophane, was the one who made the lamp. The piece is a testament to the productions of two companies—candelabras were popular items in the Heisey lines and light fixtures are still the bread and butter of Holophane. Mrs. Brown said she thought she was six years old when the lamp was made, which would date it to 1918. She wanted to leave the lamp to the museum because of her family's closeness to the Heisey operation.

It was a challenge to find a location for this piece. You'll find it in Room 4 of the King House. ♦

Collecting Heisey—Technically Speaking

Walter Ludwig

Not difficult to tell apart when you're looking at the catalog, but hold one in your hand and ...

Over the last several months as a collector and dealer in Heisey I have had several experiences which have lead me to believe that a new column was needed in the Heisey News. First let me relate some of those experiences and then I will set forth the purpose and aims of this column.

At the convention show this last June a gentleman approached me and asked if I had any #354 footed lavender jars for sale. I was very pleased to be able to show him two which I had displayed in my booth. He then said that he needed the 7- and 16-ounce ones. I had no idea what sizes the two I had were. I had tape measure ready, but he did not know how to tell the difference either. Evidently he had always trusted the dealer to tell him the size of the jar he was buying. He left frustrated because I did not know and later I learned that one of them I had was one he was missing.

I purchased a set of #341 Puritan stems recently. I got out my trusty measuring cup and filled one of the stems to the brim and then poured the contents back into the measuring cup to learn that the stem measured 3 ounces. I looked into one of my catalog reprints that shows the full line of Puritan stemware (twenty-one items on the catalog page in question) and saw that a burgundy holds 3-1/2 ounces and a wine 2 ounces, but the only stem holding 3 ounces was a cocktail with a different bowl shape than my set. So what in the world have I purchased?

The beautiful set of Rose stemware I purchased included a set of wines or clarets. But which did I have? Years ago I had purchased a set that included both sizes and at that time I was astounded at how close in look and size these two items were. Without having both items actually in hand how does one tell the difference?

The purpose of this column will be to offer some practical ways of differentiating Heisey pieces which are very similar, varying only in size. I will attempt to get measurements of items that come in sets. I will be presenting measurements on candy jars, lavenders, perfumes, stemware and other pieces. The presentation of technical details may at times be rather boring, however I think that everyone will benefit by becoming a more informed collector of Heisey glassware.

I will be drawing on several sources for these articles: my own and friends' collecting experiences, the collection and staff at the museum, and, I hope, the readers of this column. If you have a specific question, comment, or contribution that deals with the technical aspects of collecting please forward them to me in care of HCA. I would like to especially hear from those of you who have put together any set of stemware who might be able to give measurements so that I can pass on the information to all the readers of the Heisey News.

Now to get back to one of the situations I posed at the start of this column. The Heisey Rose claret measures 5-1/2 inches in height while the wine is 5-1/8 inches tall. If you are after either one of these stems you will have to carry a measuring tape with you. It is really hard to tell them apart.

My next column will deal with the measurements of those #354 footed lavender jars.

HAPPY COLLECTING !!!!♦

From the Archives

Karen D. Kneisley

I thought I'd give Don Valdes a rest this month and take a shot at the archives article. While I can't compete with his wit and inquisitive nature, I can tell you about some of the other resources that are available at the museum. For months Don has been plugging away at the cataloguing process for the factory records, photographs and correspondence in the archives. Many of you may be wondering if you'll ever get to freely enter the mysterious room at the end of the hall in Gallery 2. Rest assured, you will—some day.

But for now, there is another place you can find valuable information on the history of Heisey—the Louise Ream Library. I think the most unsung benefit of membership is the use of this wonderful resource. The library offers one of the best selections of glass-related books, many of which are out-of-print or difficult to find in the average public library.

Located on the second floor of the Administrative Building, the library contains a great number of books on a variety of aspects of glassmaking. Many of Heisey's competitors are covered in these tomes. Catalogs from Duncan Miller, Fostoria, Cambridge and Imperial don the shelves. Books about the general history of glass are useful ways to build an overview of the industry. Thematic representations include Victorian era glass, milk glass, pressed glass and cut glass. There are even archaic manuals dictating tablesetting methods and decorative uses for glassware.

Other valuable resources include photocopies of actual materials from the archives. There is shelf after shelf of original Heisey catalogs and prices lists (ever wondered where the researchers find their statistics?). Notebooks filled with photographs of store displays and glassware are available, as are copies of some of the mold drawings.

For those of you with more specific needs, there are microfilm and microfiche copies of turn books and lists from the factory. With the help of the new microfilm reader donated by the National Capital Heisey Collectors Club you could while away hours looking through original records.

Now here's the catch. When we moved the library from the first floor to the second, many things did not get put away in a logical order. I'm just dying to see some volunteers come in and arrange the books topically and alphabetically by author. Maybe we could even find a library science student (or, what the heck, the real thing) to catalog our books for us. If your club is lucky enough to have a suitably gifted person in your midst, it would be a great project for all of you and a wonderful excuse to journey to Newark.

Just something to think about while Don is resting. ♦

What, There's More?

Books for sale in the Museum Shop

If you're looking for the perfect additions to your own personal library, start at the Museum Shop. While no single book covers all there is to know, many of our bestsellers are good overviews. If you love Heisey colors, I suggest The Collectors Encyclopedia of Heisey Glassware: 1925-1938 (Bredehoft, $24.95). For a start-to-stop look try Heisey's Glassware for Your Table (Burns, $2.95). Another popular title that features other glassware companies is the 1994 edition of Elegant Glassware of the Depression Era (Florence, $19.95). A limited quantity of Elegant Glassware with the author's autograph is available in the Museum Shop. ♦

Don't miss the two newest HCA books: Heisey Etchings and Carvings, Second Edition and Catalog #81 (Baskets). See page 11 for details. Remember, you can place an order anytime the museum is open by calling the Museum Shop at (614) 345-2932.

A Heisey Sandwich

Carl Sparacio

For years we've been promising ourselves we'd visit Cape Cod and for just as many years, we've traveled all around it and never quite got there. There's always been somewhere else to go places with more urgent priorities. Places like Newark, Ohio.

To tell the truth, Cape Cod was never high on my list of places to go. That it should have been, hit me squarely between the eyes the day my wife announced that she'd gone ahead and made reservations for us to spend a few days on the Cape.

"Great," I said, "I love Cape May" (New Jersey's lovely Victorian cape).

"Cape Cod," she corrected.

"In Massachusetts?"

"Give the man a cigar! We'll be staying at the Irish Village. It's a package deal and it includes breakfast and dinner throughout our stay!"

"Oh, great, just what I need, four days of corned beef and cabbage with boiled potatoes".

As soon as I said it I knew I'd be up for the weekly "Stick-in-the-mud" Award.

"You're such an old stick in the mud," she said, not disappointing me.

"I accept the nomination," I replied.

She wasn't pleased.

Well, talk about serendipity! I learned there's more to Irish cuisine than boiled potatoes and there's more to Cape Cod than sand dunes and salty air and quaint little villages here and there. Yes, sir, Patti Page left a lot out of her song about Old Cape Cod (and not everything left out had to do with her inability to find a suitable rhyme for Nantucket, either).

Once committed, I mapped out my itinerary. The fact that my itinerary didn't exactly coincide with Helen's led to more than one spirited discussion while on the Cape. Actually, we weren't that far apart. At the top of my list were the Sandwich Glass Museum and the many Cape Cod antiques shops; her list stressed the Sandwich Glass Museum, too, but added dining, dancing, art galleries, theater, shopping, scenery and, you know, those "quaint" places guaranteed to mess up any trip.

Mrs. S. reminded me, as she often does, that antiquing is not the sole reason for our existence and suggested we downplay it just this once and concentrate on experiencing New England's early American lifestyle. I suggested we'd really get the best "feel" of the area from its antiques shops and argued that the myriad of Early American Pizza Parlors and Colonial Quick Burger stands that were surely dotting the sand dunes would do little to conjure up Pilgrims, Salem Witches, Paul Revere or Minute Men. The problem remained unresolved so we headed for our one area of agreement, the Sandwich Glass Museum.

My first thought, once we found the museum, was to make ourselves known to Kirk Nelson, the curator. Kirk and I go way back—along with a few hundred other people, I listened to him speak on Sandwich's dolphin candlesticks at the Heisey convention this year. Surely he'd remember me. I stood out. I was the one way off in the farthest corner of the banquet room with raspberry sauce on his tie.

I asked the attendant at the museum entrance if Kirk was in (using his first name to emphasize our close relationship). She said, "Who?"

"Kirk, Kirk Nelson, the curator, " I added, trying to keep exasperation in check.

"Oh, yes, he's about, " she said and we stared blankly at each other until, eventually, I gave it up. She didn't say just what he was about and far be it from me to interrupt something important—or even personal.

The Sandwich Glass Museum is lovely. Any comparison with the National Heisey Glass Museum would be foolish—they are so different. In the first place, the Sandwich Glass Museum doesn't have an elevator. In fact, you'd have a tough time finding a second floor. But their museum does have an ambiance and charm that comes with age—our Heisey museum, charming as it is, won't achieve a similar glow until age and wear begin to show around its edges. And, as with both these first class museums, a walk through the rooms is a revelation.

The layout of the Sandwich museum is designed to educate. The exhibits proceed from the early glass making process, through the history of the company and its product. A visitor will get most out of a tour by following each display in order.

There was much that I never would have recognized as Sandwich glass, all pieces were beautiful and all pieces rare but not all pieces were lacy Sandwich. Once you've been through the Sandwich Glass Museum you won't wonder why Curator Kirk Nelson stressed Sandwich's dolphin candlesticks in his talk—they appear to be what the Sandwich Glass Company stressed in their production.

We had a wonderful visit oohing and aahing at every turn. I hated to leave but there was an entire Cape yet to explore. Once outside the museum we thought we spotted Kirk on the street. We were disappointed though, someone said it was Michael Jackson. Kirk should get a new hat (or ditch the white glove).

Hunting for Heisey on Cape Cod was not the thrill I thought it might be. I wish I could report I discovered the mother lode. We saw very little Heisey and what we did see was nothing to write home about. Perhaps the area is picked over early in the summer. More out of desperation than anything else, we bought a round Ridgeleigh cigarette holder. Hey, it's Heisey, isn't it? Our antiquing wasn't a complete disaster, however, we did find a Duncan Miller rarity and a seldom seen piece in Fostoria's Alexis. I felt like a traitor.

There are many fun things to do and see on Cape Cod. We visited the Kennedys at Hyannis Port the day mama Rose Kennedy became 104 years old. I don't think she saw us. We went to the Pairpoint Glass place, too, where they still make a pseudo Erikson-style glass and we even went to the movies one night. That's something we never do at home.

There is much left for us to do and see on the Cape antiques shops yet untouched by these searching eyes. Who would not want to spend more time on a sand dune breathing salty air close by those quaint little villages here and there? I would and I will again. Besides, as we were leaving the Irish Village to head home, a Leprechaun whispered to me that the holy grail of Heisey stems, a Fandango goblet, was just over the next dune in a shop open only when a rainbow appears.

Sur'n begorra, I'll be back. ♦

Whimsies—Brief Tidbits of Heisey History

Kelly Thran

Did you Know?... That at the turn of the century the Heisey factory was pressing lamp shades for the Holophane Company. This photograph of Heisey workers in 1900 shows a Holophane mold and fixture. Both companies were located on Oakwood Avenue and occasionally worked together. Today Holophane is still in operation and is one of the country's largest manufacturers of institutional lighting. ♦

Second Edition of Etchings and Carvings Available

Dennis Headrick, Newberg, Oregon

A new second edition of Heisey Etchings and Carvings is on the way! It combines the original edition of 1977, the addendum of 1981, and new information obtained since that time. At three hundred pages it's a reference not to be taken lightly.

How did I come into this picture? I am a collector that loves "original" and detailed information. This interest, my profession, and the availability of two original Heisey catalogs recently came together with the printing of two new catalog reprints for HCA. Shortly following the completion of the catalog reprints, I was contacted about reprinting the etching books from extant copies. (The original pasteups and plates were no longer available.)

While considering the reprints I decided to volunteer to merge the two books into one new volume with additions and corrections as necessary. My offer was accepted and the work began—first with a search for original copies that were still in excellent condition. HCA didn't have any copies and my personal copy with all of my notes certainly didn't qualify. Thankfully, three HCA members gave up their original first printing copies for the project with the promise of a copy of the new edition.

The project was a greater task than I, a printer by occupation, had estimated. Allowing fifteen to twenty minutes per page for 280 pages with another ten hours for the indices should cover it. NOT! The number of hours I had estimated for the job came and went—and I quit counting! The job was at once tedious with seemingly endless checking of details and highly educational with the multitude of facts that I previously hadn't noticed.

While creating new indices, I decided to include the blownware items in the first chapter. This section alone is a resource that is duplicated in no other catalog reprint. I'm sure it is overlooked by many as they quickly skip the first section and turn to the etching "picture" pages. The four indices—etching number, etching name, pattern number, and pattern name—form a cross-references to all etchings and patterns shown in the volume. To make this edition consistent with other publications, names applied to patterns by various authors since the original publication are included in the indices even though they may not actually appear in the text of the book.

Would I do it again? As with most time-consuming projects, right now it's not a fair question to ask . . . but time will tell what will be in the future. I hope you find this combined edition valuable in your study of decorations on Heisey glassware. ♦

CLUB NOTES

Hoosier Heisey Club #48

Sonnie Taylor, Secretary

The Hoosier Heisey Club met Saturday, June 4, from 2:00 p.m. to 4:00 p.m. at the Warren Library in Indianapolis. Don Rabourn, our president, welcomed our sixteen members and two guests, Jim and Marcy Buzzelli. After the usual reports, suggestions were accepted for future programs.

Mike Rosenberger will present a program on cordials and goblets. Conna Higgins will give a presentation on the Peerless pattern. Members are invited to bring along items that will enhance the programs.

Heisey by Imperial was the topic Pat Davis presented. She stated that Imperial bought all molds, etchings, etc, from the sixty-three year old Heisey plant at Newark and moved production to the Imperial plant in Bellaire. Probably the most often seen reproduction is the Ipswich #1405 candy jar in Amber, Heather, or Verde. Heisey only made this item in Crystal. Imperial also produced a candy box made from the Ipswich footed tumbler in Moonlite Blue between 1962-1965. Many other pieces were made by Imperial using Heisey molds. Fortunately, for Heisey collectors, the molds, etchings, etc. are now owned by the Heisey Collectors of America and cannot be reproduced without the board's approval.

Fred Duhm led the program on pattern # 433, Grecian Border, or as it is more commonly known, Greek Key. It is shown in Vogel's Book 2, Colonial years 1906-1922 with fourteen pages showing the many items in this pattern. The punch bowl in Flamingo is a most striking piece in Greek Key. Members brought for display a tankard, oval individual cream and sugar, ice tub, ft'd., nut cup, 4-inch nappy, butter pat, handled 6-inch nappy, and a 6-inch flat soup plate with ruby stain.

Don Rabourn during "Show and Tell," displayed recently found treasures. Members brought four Fairacre Moongleam stem sherbets, Cut Block custard cream pitcher, Empress Flamingo sugar, #4 Oakleaf Flamingo coaster, Peerless jelly comptr, Ridgeleigh cigarette box with metal finial on lid, Fern individual cream and sugar, Eight crystal goblets from the Gus Heisey auction, Pineapple & Fan tumbler in Emerald with gold, Twist Moongleam relish and Peerless salt shaker. ♦

A Special Thank You

Thanks again for all your kind thoughts about my mother. ♦

Northwest Heisey Collectors Club #22

Dixie Fuller, Secretary

Our August meeting was held in the home of Don and Luvonne Nelson in Bellingham, Washington on a beautiful summer day on the Puget Sound. Our program was Twist #1252. This pattern was produced from 1924-37 in Crystal, Flamingo, Moongleam, Marigold, Sahara, Hawthorne and Alexandrite. Many beautiful examples of this pattern and these colors were represented. We were delighted to see a Moongleam Kraft cheese plate; individual bon bon in Flamingo; footed utility plate in Moongleam; 5-ounce tumbler in Flamingo footed mayo in Moongleam; mustard in Flamingo; Octagon dish with Jasmine cuttings by Kusak; Marigold Formal goblet; Crystal one-light candlestick; footed Almond in Crystal; 8-inch low footed bowl in Moongleam; Lightning handled footed sugar in Moongleam; 13-inch celery in Moongleam; Moongleam tumbler; Moongleam nut cups; Marigold 6-inch plate; Hawthorne diamond optic sugar and creamer; two styles of cup, one with the Lightning handle and one with the round handle with band; cream soup in Moongleam; double relish in Moongleam; 2-ounce cruet in Crystal; footed Marigold mayo. Our group learned a lot about this large pattern during the meeting.

Preparations were made to put on Heisey display at the Fenton Glass Show in Kent, Washington. Our theme will be Verlys. Our September meeting will be held at an Antique Mall in Snohomish where we'll be able to eat and browse after the meeting. If you are in the Northwest, join us. ♦

DixieLand Heisey Club #48

Bob Bartholomew, secretary

At our July 9 meeting members brought their first Heisey piece. It was fun learning about what got them hooked on Heisey. We heard some interesting tales about convention too.

Our last meeting will be on Friday September 9 (instead of Saturday) 6:30 p.m. at the Holiday Inn on Virginia Ave. one block west of I85 near the Atlanta airport.

Please bring pictures of how you display your Heisey. We will be showing the new video that was received at convention and a video on toothpicks. Visitors are always welcome. For information or directions call Bob (404) 466-7879. ♦
